CHANCELLOR’S STRATEGIC IMPERATIVES FOR THE LONG-TERM FUTURE OF WCCCD

The ultimate test of a leader is whether he or she teaches others to be leaders and builds an organization that can sustain itself when he or she is not around. The final test of a leader is that he or she leaves behind other leaders with the capacity, conviction, and will to carry on. – Lorin Woolfe

My strategic imperative for the development of WCCCD’s leadership of the future is stated as follows: Through the leadership continuity program and the development of managers having the capacity for future executive leadership, develop a network of committed, skilled, empowered, and collaborative leaders at the district, divisional, and campus levels who have the capacity and will to continue the transformation of WCCCD in the years ahead, even beyond the tenure of the current position holders (links to goals of the Strategic Plan: Goal 4, Objective 4).

My purpose in sponsoring this “leadership continuity” strategic imperative is to develop the next generation of executive, administrative, and faculty leaders who will have the capacity to extend high-quality leadership and institutional excellence at all levels into the long-term future of WCCCD. Several initiatives are now underway to achieve this purpose: the creation of the Emerging Leaders Team as well as participation by WCCCD administrators in the Kansas State University’s doctoral program for community college leadership, Ferris State University’s doctoral program for community college leadership, and the Leadership Academy of the Michigan Community College Association. This strategic imperative also includes professional development experiences for all faculty and staff members (for example, bachelor’s degree holders seeking to earn a master’s degree). A key dimension of the leadership continuity initiative is the Emerging Leaders Team (ELT). I have selected members of this new team on the basis of their potential for future executive leadership. ELT members meet regularly with Dr. Beaumont, Dr. Myran, and me as we provide them with leadership growth experiences that empower them to advance in their careers and increase their capacity to contribute to shaping the best future of WCCCD. For example, members of the ELT attended the 2023 national conference of the American Association of Community Colleges. ELT members are also encouraged to become “future thinkers,” engaging with students, faculty, and staff in envisioning WCCCD’s long-term future in areas such as career education, liberal arts, student services, and community engagement.
